Living in Berlin

Similar to other major cities in Europe, living in Berlin is not cheap. The German Government estimates that a student will need € 934 per month (this is the amount that is used for calculating the blocked bank account). However, be advised that costs in Berlin are likely to be higher than that. How much money you will need per month obviously depends on your personal preferences and lifestyle. Finding accommodation in Berlin is challenging, so it is better to be prepared to pay a high rent (we estimate at least € 500 per month for basic accommodation, and the more you are willing to pay, the wider the range of options). You should also start with your search of accommodation as early as possible, ideally 2-3 months in advance.

Also, please note that it is common in Germany to pay up to three months rent as a deposit that the landlord will hold until you move out.

If you have further questions on living expenses, please contact berlinstudentsupport@arden.ac.uk.

Yours sincerely,

Steve Clayton
